

International Studies Program

The department of Integrative Humanities and Social Sciences offers a Bachelor of Arts (B.A.) in International studies, an interdisciplinary program at NC State that prepares graduates to embrace a world where global linkages exist alongside boundaries and separations. Students will learn to speak a foreign language, engage with culturally diverse societies, study the economic dynamics of international trade and confront changing geopolitical lines. The International Studies curriculum is designed to educate students within a global context. The program of study requires students to integrate theoretical knowledge about broad global processes and methods used to study them with in-depth examination of a particular world region or major theme in international studies. The curriculum is designed to expose students to a variety of disciplinary approaches. Many of our graduates go on to work for global corporations, international organizations, pursue advanced studies in diverse academic fields, and in the government or non-profit sectors. International studies students include some of NC State's most engaged and intellectually active undergraduates.

All International Studies students take the following required courses:

- IS 200: Introduction to International Studies
- IS 393: Theories of Globalization
- IS 491: Senior Seminar in International Studies
- Acquire foreign language skills (complete a 300 level or above course)
- All international studies majors must participate in study abroad.

The major requires study abroad experience equal to six hours of college credits. You'll work with your international studies faculty advisor to make sure your study abroad experience satisfies degree requirements. This unique component adds depth to your education through sustained engagement with people and communities outside the United States.
